Gender Gap. Having been born in the 1980s, I have luckily not felt the weight of a terribly imbalanced work environment or home life. In the 13 years since I graduated college, I've heard older women complain about their first work experiences, but like so many things in life, if you haven't lived it, it's nearly impossible to imagine.

Does Gender Bias Still Exist in Today's Workplace ...

At work, the presumptions are about power, labour, position and organizational structures. Gender roles influence men and women in almost every aspect of life. The differences between the sexes both real and imagined, are used as a means to justify their existence. Gender inequality arises, from these perceived differences.

Why Gender Matters | Psychology Today

Women have made great strides in the workplace, but inequality persists. The issue of equal pay is still a hot-button topic. The US Census Bureau reports that women earn 80 percent of what men are paid. Such inequality is hardly unique to the United States, however.

Gender Inequality and Women in the Workplace

Women experience a pay gap compared to men's wages for the same work. In America, a woman earns 81 cents to a man's dollar. For African-American and Latin American women, the difference is greater. 4

12 Gender Issues Affecting Women Around the World

Recommended approaches exist that focus on creating gender equality in the workplace. This means that everyone has the same opportunities and equal pay for equal work. Workplaces should be a place where men and women want to work and feel rewarded and cared for with their work. Men and women may take advantage of different perks and opportunities.

How to Ensure Gender Equality in the Workplace

Generational differences lead to misunderstanding and conflict among the four age groups independent of gender. Hard-working Boomers of both genders judge Millennials for not having the right "work ethic." They scratch their heads at the informality of the attire of younger workers. In these areas women seem to experience the conflict more intensely.

Gender and Generational Differences: The Intersection ...

Gender-based violence and discrimination costs everyone. We address gender inequality by working with entire communities — women, girls, men, and boys — to transform discriminatory practices together. We also work with faith leaders around the world to acknowledge and act upon gender injustices in their communities.
