No sentencing policy has been stated as clearly as the types of punishments, when both of the concepts form important aspects under criminal law. The need for a fixed regime is needed because of the punishment policy being indeterminate and inconsistent.

Sentencing Policy and Practices | Prison Policy Initiative

Should sentencing in capital cases be decided by the judge or the jury? Since 1976, the Supreme Court has decided that a two-step process is required: (1) narrow the group of murderers eligible for capital punishment by finding some reasonably objective fact, and (2) decide on what the punishment is just after considering whatever aggravating factors state law specifies and practically ...
